Premier Responding to Motion of No Confidence Vote ,1991

Motions of Confidence and No-confidence G. C. Malhotra,1998 With reference to the Indian parliament.

Vote of No Confidence Carla Stalling Huntington,2012-04-25 Divorced, in debt and unemployed, Olivia Clarke figured she had nothing to lose if she left California. She was sick of the plastic lifestyle and her family's lifelong casting her as its scapegoat. Nearly some thirty-five years after her father's murder she was still haunted by guilt. It was the best time to leave anyway, because all she had left was her dissertation. Actually if she'd felt like she had a choice, she would have just walked away, disillusioned and despairing. In Kansas City she found peace, spending six months finishing her dissertation, healing, and taking ballet classes--all the while praying for a teaching position. Over forty, female and black, if she opened another letter that told her how qualified she was but she didn't get the job she would scream. At what seemed to be the eleventh hour, Western State University in Roadims, Arkansas, offered her an assistant professor position in the school of business. Trepidation pulsed in Olivia's veins since the university only had five professors of color but she went anyway. Five years hence with the granting of tenure and promotion, the faculty elected Olivia as Senate President. At nearly the same instant, the Board unexpectedly ousted university President Fonticello who'd been in that role for over twenty-five years. Nobody was prepared for the impact. Without President Fonticello, the guns of university and Republican state politics were drawn, loaded, and aimed at Olivia. In this novel you'll experience the real world "faculty versus administration" zero-sum game of public university life exacerbated by the worst economic downturn in US history. Following Olivia's lead, how would you cast your Vote of No Confidence? CARLA STALLING HUNTINGTON, PhD received her doctorate from the University of California, Riverside. She has published scholarly monographs and articles on dance and consumer behavior. A California native, she resides with her husband in Woodland Hills.

The 8th Vote of No Confidence Motion in the Parliament of South Africa ,2018 The aim of this research is to examine the language utilised in the political discourse of the South African parliamentary sphere. It also evaluates the persuasive strategies used by South African parliamentarians in parliament speeches and explores how the members of parliament use language to achieve their political supremacy confidence or votes of censure in the British Parliament,¹ are votes instituted in Parliament by the opposition party which, if they succeed, indicate that the Government no longer has the support of the majority of Parliament (including the Government's own party members), and thus lead to a dissolution of the Government and new elections.² [...] In early congressional considerations some Members of Congress, in their opposition to resolutions which declared either an opinion of praise or disapproval of the executive, cited the lack of an express constitutional grant of authority for the House or the Senate to state an opinion on the conduct or propriety of an executive officer in the form of a formal resolution of censure or disapproval.⁴ [...] The resolutions or statements both the House and the Senate have adopted in the past concerning a Government official, other than a Member of Congress, have expressed disapproval, censure, or opinion that an officer should be removed. Such an expression of opinion, censure, disapproval or lack of confidence in or of a federal officer by the House, the Senate, or the Congress is not an impeachment [...] Similarly, 16 of the 31 resolutions identified by electronic search explicitly declared themselves to be statements of the sense of the Congress or of the house acting (usually in those terms, though a few refer instead to the sentiment or judgment of Congress or either house). [...] After debating both the substance of the charges and the authority of the House to adopt such a resolution, characterized by one Member as censur[ing] indiscriminately the President of the United States and the Secretary of Navy,¹⁸ the House adopted the resolution 106-61.¹⁹ The Senate adopted a resolution in 1886 in which it expressed its condemnation of President Cleveland's Attorney General.

No Confidence" Votes and Other Forms of Congressional Censure of Public Officials ,2007 For example, votes of no

Cabinet Responsibility to Legislature G. C. Malhotra, 2004 With reference to Indian parliament and state legislatures.

"No Confidence" Votes and Other Forms of Congressional Censure of Public Officials, 2007 S.J. Res. 14 of the 110th Congress, submitted on May 24, 2007, has been described as proposing a vote of no confidence in Attorney General Alberto Gonzales. This report discusses the possible significance of action by Congress or either House to adopt a resolution expressing no confidence in a cabinet official or other official in the executive branch of the federal government. It examines the legal issues that could be raised by resolutions of this kind and discusses the relation of such action both to votes of no confidence in systems of parliamentary government and to congressional action to censure or otherwise express disapprobation of public officials. It also describes known instances in which action to express a lack of confidence in, or impose another form of censure on, public officials have been attempted in Congress.

Parliaments and Government Termination Reuven Y. Hazan,Bjørn Erik Rasch,2023-09-12 This book assesses the larger influences that government termination by parliaments has on executive-legislative relations, claiming that the way in which the governments may be challenged or dismissed has far greater impact than previously understood. The core feature of a parliamentary system is not that governments tend to emerge from the legislatures in some way or another, but their political responsibility to this body. While in only some parliamentary systems the government needs formal support of parliament to take office, in all parliamentary systems no government can survive against the will of parliament. The academic literature related to the rules for how governments form is vast. Strikingly, scholars have paid far less time to unpack the core institution of parliamentary systems of government – the confidence relationship and the various no confidence procedures. The chapters explore the institutions by which parliaments hold governments accountable and how they balance elected parliaments and appointed governments in parliamentary systems. Contributions move beyond the standard focus on government formation and instead analyse government termination by parliament evaluating its consequences in a detailed and comprehensive manner. This book will be of interest to students and academics in the field of political science, governance and political theory. The chapters in this book were originally published in West European Politics.

Challenging Government Laron Kenneth Williams,2010 Our understanding of parliamentary politics suggests that no-confidence motions have a critical place in government continuation, reorganization and termination. More specifically, we know that opposition parties use no-confidence motions as a way of removing the government and potentially inducing early elections. Up until now, we know little about either the causes or the consequences of no-confidence motions. In this dissertation, I first develop a formal model of the conditions under which an opposition party will threaten to propose (and eventually propose) a no-confidence motion in the government. The model provides a number of intuitive observations about the behavior of opposition parties and the reactions of governments to challenges. I develop a competence-based theory where opposition parties signal their perception of the government's competence with no-confidence motions. In the game, opposition parties act both in terms of short-term gains as well as long-term electoral gains. This model provides intuitive answers that help us understand the circumstances under which the opposition will challenge the government. The model also provides empirical expectations regarding the probability that the motion is successful, in addition to its long-term electoral consequences. Next, I test the theoretical propositions regarding the occurrence of noconfidence motions on a cross-sectional time-series data set of all no-confidence motions in a sample of parliamentary democracies in the post-World War II era. Even though successful no-confidence motions are relatively rare, they can have profound consequences on policy outcomes. The next section illustrates these consequences, as I find that having a no-confidence motion proposed against them makes governments more likely to be targeted by other states in international conflicts. In the conclusion I summarize the key findings, present the broad implications for the study of parliamentary decision making, and discuss avenues for future research.

The Atypicality of Semi-presidentialism in the Post-Soviet Countries: the Context of the Votes of No Confidence in Governments Vitaliy S. Lytvyn, Ihor Y. Osadchuk, 2019 Abstract: The variations of presidential, parliamentary and semi-presidential systems of government represent the main framework of analysis of this study. Extremely different factors of the political process and inter-institutional relations, which are the conditions for defining different systems of government, can be indicators for distinguishing typical and atypical systems of government. In this sense, the purpose of this article is to determine whether the peculiarities of the institution of the vote of no confidence in governments in several post-Soviet semi-presidential countries (Azerbaijan, Belarus, Georgia, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, and Russia) can predetermine the atypicality of these systems of government. It is argued that the atypicality of the post-Soviet semi-presidentialism is often due to the fact that parliaments have the right to cast the votes of no confidence in governments, but the latter come in force only when they are supported by presidents, who may be empowered to
